AGAIN we have direct evidence of the firm hold that the art, cult or science of record collecting has obtained upon a younger generation. We have now scored our quarter-century as specialist collector and it has certainly been present in the minds of many of us of that small original group who set the thing going to speculate upon the probable fate of their hard-won collections. Would they survive the passing of those who made them? To us, the names of the great singers we have tried to honour were very real, for most of us had heard most of them, and those whom we had not heard in person were well known to us. Our memories were so full of the pictures and our ears so full of the sounds when the "Royal Opera" was well and truly Royal, which cannot be said for the junketings at the tea-party now in possession, and it has seemed that lacking these aids to incentive in record-collecting, the discs left by the great singers of the operdämmerung might well have seemed meaningless to a generation not generally given to looking over its shoulder, and whose ears had been so much weened away from musical sounds into the direction of electrical noises - pleasant in their way, like most temptations. However, events have shown that our fears were groundless; artistic and sympathetic imagination has replaced first-hand experience, and it is the general experience that none of our prized records are rejected on account of age or even, within limits, of condition.

But another factor is looming up which may well alter the face of things for the collector perhaps to a vital extent, and that is the revolution now taking place under our eyes in the onrush of the micro-groove record and its attendant consequences. For not only is the old type of record in process of liquidation, but the highly specialised acoustical gramophones so indispensable to the collector of the early gems of recording are threatened with extinction. Not all gramophonists are of the long-playing kind, and clearly something will have to be done to save the growing body of collectors from isolation and ruin. Doubtless the radiogram will suffice for the many who will continue to prize their own particular "78s", but what of the matchless acoustical vocal records, and of the collector's G. & Ts. in particular? Supposing that the awakening from the long-playing pipe-dream comes too late, when acoustical reproduction has become a thing of the past? What then? I leave it as a question mark.

In the days before electrical recording, a musical amateur who had heard the standard major works say five times was something of a veteran, and moreover he had listened to five different and individual performances, which is not at all the same thing as hearing --teen identical performances until he has become actually weary of the work, - a horrid and unnatural state which is one of the most damaging charges to be laid at the door of gramophone and radio.

The maze in which the gramophone industry is now enmeshed gives a highly appropriate cue for the issue of Mr. Bennett's mighty contribution to our increasing bibliography, perhaps as an epitaph or postlude to a passing epoch, or rather let us hope as a reminder that the epoch declines to pass. But in either case the sentence of death passed upon the old type of disc directs our thoughts to its origin and the various philosophic speculations which arise from a clear picture of the over half-century of its existence, in the course of which collectors will hardly fail to recognise the almost uncanny rightness with which the G. & T. Company launched their enterprise. The size and speed of records, the types of label and the general method of recording and reproduction remained unaltered in principle for a matter of twenty years, nor did any of their competitors succeed in introducing any important innovation, until the Company at about that time tackled the problem of reproduction instead of concentrating on the very limited experiments which were all that were then possible in recording methods. The result was sensational, and with the "Re-Entrant" gramophone, with its much increased range, superb musical tone and its multi-dimensional sound effect, and coming just when electrical recording had solved many intractable problems (and created others), it seemed that the golden age of the gramophone had dawned. But unhappily, as this writer thinks, that was to prove to be only of short duration, for it was followed and immediately superseded by the dubious excitements of electrical reproduction, which, it is hardly too much to say, has created an entirely new type of listener, whose aims may be something quite apart from pure musical sound and who have allowed their ears to become accommodated to sounds which are (and must be) inherently meretricious. There is, maybe, a gain in definition and clarity, but it has seemed at times and the bigger and more expensive the reproducer the further we get from a natural sound, and it is to be feared that those who favour such apparatus would not be content with a natural sound even if they were able to get it. However, all these problems are in process of gestation, and we shall have to await events.

Returning to our starting point, a word may not be out of place on the subject of the correct speeds of the early G. & Ts. There can be little doubt that on this point the old G. & T. Company were inclined to be somewhat carefree, for although they recognised the importance of playing in the correct pitch, beyond advising in their 1904-5 celebrity catalogue that their records should be played at 72 to 74 r.p.m. they did little about ensuring that these speeds were uniformly observed at recording sessions. As a result we have G. & T. records which vary from 70 r.p.m. to as much as 82, though in general the gramophonist tended to play all ~~at~~ round about a "normal" speed of 78, which not unnaturally resulted in a feeling that either the singers were much overrated or the recording was very bad. It is pitch, then, that is the key to the difficulty, but for such as have not the immediate means of ascertaining this, it is a generally good rule to play the G. & T. of 1902-4 a good deal slower than 78, when the voice will be heard, perhaps for the first time, with all its fullness and beauty. Further, if the listener finds the resulting tempo decidedly slower than that to which high-speed conductors have accustomed him, he may also be hearing the composer's speed for the first time. Having ascertained the correct pitch of a record, the use of a stroboscope for fixing the appropriate speed is necessary, and fortunately this clever device may now be obtained with a wide range of speeds.

Mr. Bennett deserves our gratitude for having tackled an undertaking which none of us previously have dared to face, for he has achieved a degree of completeness such as would have deterred all but the most determined, and his addition at immense labour of the hitherto avoided matrix numbers will offer unlimited scope to the curious-minded for investigating codes, sequences and dates, and I am sure it will keep them busy! The book is authoritative and is not likely to be challenged or superseded. Let us therefore give praise where praise is due.

INTRODUCTION...

The compiler of a book such as this faces a much more difficult task than the novelist who merely has to develop his theme and bring the hero and heroine to a happy or unhappy ending as he so desires. I have been obliged to decide whether to include all records of every language group (impossible in one volume), all celebrity recordings of every country (this would assuredly omit all ballad and music-hall offerings), only records after 1908/9 (impracticable since so many of the earlier records have never yet been tabulated), discs recorded in London, Paris or Milan in separate sections (of secondary importance), or matrix numbers forming the basic layout (only possible if sufficient matrix numbers become available).

I have decided, therefore, in the following pages to list all known recordings under their four-figure and five-figured groups, which omit the language numeral of 2 for Russian, 3 for French, 4 for German, 5 for Italian etc. Broadly speaking, these may be classified as "sung in English"; but not all of these were recorded in London, neither are all to English words. The basic catalogue numbers are the 2000, 3000, 4000 (10") series; 02000, 03000, 04000 (12"), with the prefixed 2-, 3-, 4- and 5- as a continuation of any series where the number of new records warranted; the only fully expanded set of figures is the 2000 which used up to prefix 5, but the numberings are not consecutive and many empty spaces are apparent. Many interesting London records in the French and Italian languages have not been included here because it is thought more desirable to keep intact these blocks of catalogue numbers for future volumes in the series. The double-sided Black and Plum Labels have been listed where they apply to vocal recordings, also the Red Label series up to the end of the acoustic era. Enough has been said, therefore, to explain the purpose and framework of the book.

When the first recordings of vocalists took place in London in the autumn of 1898 no one could have foreseen that in fifty years' time somebody would be engrossed in the fascinating task of compiling a volume containing the result of their lives' work on gramophone records, their successes and perhaps their failures, their unrealised expectations or their blighted hopes and ambitions. One wonders what happiness was theirs in catering for our enjoyment, or what tragedies awaited them which were undreamed of when they recorded for our pleasure. Their voices have long been silent, even some of their very names are almost forgotten under a half century of dust. Once upon a time their whole recorded output was available to any interested buyer, but where is it all to-day? ...

On the 16th. November 1898 the Gramophone Company issued its first lists of records for the people of Britain, to be followed soon afterwards by an English and an American list, both dated the 22nd. of February 1899; supplementary lists came out on the 10th. and the 28th. of November of the same year, from this time new issues being advertised each month as is the custom to-day. Some of these early Berliners were recorded in America in 1895 and were great successes there before being imported into this country - such as Maurice Parka, George T. Gaskin, John Terrell and George W. Johnson. It is safe to say that any recording date previous to 1898 is not of London origin.

The familiar figure of the Dog was first seen on a supplement in January 1900 but did not grace the record labels until some years later. The size of the discs is not mentioned, and although the majority of them were of 7" diameter, the existence of the 10" Berliner, however elusive, is an accepted fact. The name of the recording company is not inserted, nor for that matter, Berliner. During the last month of 1900 the style of the Company was changed to The Gramophone & Typewriter Ltd. and the first issues came out during the following month, the word Berliner etched on the disc being replaced by "Gramophone Record" printed on the label. One year later, in January 1902, the first G. & T. issues of 10" "Concert" records was announced, but it is possible that some of these appeared before this date.

In those distant days nobody apparently cared much about the size of a record so long as it gave pleasure - at 2/6 for a 7" and 5/- for a 10". The first mention of the smaller diameter which I have been able to unearth is from a list of June in this same year, six months after the first batch of 10" came on to the market and one year before the advent of the larger "Monarch" with the catalogue's first 01000 and 02000 series headed by Dan Leno and Ben Davies respectively.

In September 1905 catalogues were reduced in size to approximately present day dimensions. Of course, all accompaniments to singers were initially by means of the piano, although even some of the smaller series were with orchestra, the latter practice becoming fairly general after this year, which marked the demise of the 7" record with its final issues in the following January, after which they were seen no more.

Up to this time nothing definite had ever appeared in print regarding the speeds at which the records should be played, and apart from a minimum and maximum guide there was nothing to help the listener except his ears, if he was fortunate enough to possess any. In parenthesis, I bemoan the fact that very few people to-day are so gifted, otherwise more comment would have been made (to name one example) regarding Caruso in "Vesti la giubba" on 52440, concerning his opening phrase. Speeds were added to the printed data in August 1906 and continued for many years until the general stabilisation of a speed of 78 r.p.m.; nevertheless, there are discrepancies which must be discovered by the individual. Generally, however, these figures are very helpful indeed and show a more markedly musical trend and an increased responsibility in the handling of the human voice on records.

The next milestone was reached in January 1908 when the Gramophone Company re-appeared on the labels as "The Gramophone Company Ltd. and Sister Companies" - the "Pre-Dog" period in gramophone history, with Black Labels selling at 5/6 and 3/6. After this year, the "Angel" Trade Mark disappeared from the pages of the catalogue. The following year the picture of the Dog took its place on the labels which became familiarly known as "Dog Concert" and "Dog Monarch", until in August 1910 the style "His Master's Voice" replaced the "Monarch" and "Concert" labels and drew attention to the Trade Mark of the Dog by the caption "You know it by this" and "No instrument or record is manufactured and sold by the Gramophone Company that does not bear this Trade Mark".

December 1910 witnessed the introduction of the Violet Label priced at 6/6 and 4/6. Two years later the first double-sided Plum Label records made their bow under the prefixed letters "C" and "B" for 12" and 10", but it was towards the end of 1915 before vocal solos appeared. Double-sided Black Label "D" records came out in February 1918 at 6/6; Plum Label sold at 5/6 and 3/6 and Violet, being a rather more aristocratic brand, demanded 7/- and 5/-. There were further price changes in the ensuing year, Violet leading off at 7/6 and 5/6, Black at 6/6 and 4/6 (the latter for the new "E" 10" series), Plum 6/- and 4/-. Not until February 1920 were the first vocal solos on "E" discs available. Slight variations in price affected the 1922 catalogue, but no further Violet Labels were issued later than the March 1920 catalogue, the majority being transferred to Black but a chosen few bearing Red Labels. Single-sided Red Label led off at 7/6 and 5/6, double-sided Black obtained similar prices, Plum being 6/- and 4/-; Patti Pink Label were 12/6 and 8/-, Clara Butt Dark Blue at 12/6 for a 12", Buff 9/- and 6/6, and other colours which do not come within the scope of this present volume. At the end of 1923 Plum Label dropped to 4/6 and 3/-, Black to 6/6 and 4/6, Red Label double-sided "DB" and "DA" appreciated to 8/6 and 6/-, while Buff were 10/- and 7/-, and these prices continued to the end of the period in which we are interested at present.

Piano accompaniments were the rule until about the end of 1905 when the orchestra was more or less the accepted medium; orchestral accompaniments in early days have been mentioned, as have pianoforte more recently where known.

The general plan of this catalogue regarding each item gives first (a) the catalogue number, followed by (b) the artist; (c) title of piece performed; (d) composer; (e) name of opera, oratorio or other work from which taken; (f) speed, in brackets, if other than 78; (g) matrix no. in brackets; (h) actual date of recording in Roman numerals - day, month and year if known, or month and year, or year only; alternatively, date of issue such as 3/12 signifying month and year; (i) label colour if different from Black Label; (j) double-sided version or any other connexion with the one under review, eg. I.R.C.C.

The main Index contains the names of some 980 artists with the catalogue numbers of their recordings.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS ...

Grateful thanks are due to The Gramophone Company Limited for permission to inspect their files, and especially do I wish to thank Miss L. A. Walton, Head of the Museum, The Gramophone Company Limited, Hayes, Middlesex, for the tremendous amount of practical help towards the compilation of the book, the choice of a suitable title and her help and advice to further the publication, and for the great interest which she has shown throughout.

My grateful thanks also are extended to Miss Valentine Britten, The Gramophone Librarian, B.B.C., London, for her kind co-operation and for the privilege of access to the Library.

Once again I am indebted to Mr. P. G. Hurst for so ably writing the Preface and for his suggestions and criticisms; also to Messrs. Sam C. Greaves and Alan Kelly, Glasgow, and Brian Rust, B.B.C. Gramophone Library, for numerous additional matrix numbers and missing titles.

I am grateful to Mr. Laurence Hevingham-Root of Victoria, Australia, for the loan of early Australian catalogues which yielded some unknown artists and titles.

Acknowledgments are made to the following generous contributors who have rendered their services in various ways :

Frederick Burden Esq., Peacehaven, Sussex
Victor Girard Esq., Paris
H. Hugh Harvey Esq., London
Dr. Boris Semeonoff, Edinburgh
